Dear Hiring Director,

My name is Em English, and I hope this letter finds you well. I am writing to express my interest in your English language teaching position.

I have previously worked as a science teacher at The Wild Thing for the past 2.5 years, teaching students aged 5-16 about biology and zoology according to the Arizona State Science Standard. I would love to take my classroom experience in the science field and translate it to teaching English, as I am most passionate about this category. I feel my work with students from varying ages and backgrounds makes me uniquely qualified to work with any class and thrive in any classroom.

I also have work experience outside of the United States, as I am currently doing an internship in Ghana with an organization called Challenging Heights. My internship focuses on research into problems such as human trafficking and child slavery. Because of this unique work experience, I have had the opportunity to work with children who barely know English and build relationships with them. I have learned through this experience that I can quickly adapt to other cultures and befriend communities wherever I go. I enjoy immersing myself in different cultures' languages, lifestyles, and traditions.

Thank you for taking the time to review my application. I would greatly appreciate the chance to schedule an interview to discuss further how I can be an asset to your school's English department and contribute to your students' success.

Sincerely,

Emma' Em' English
